

Art is everywhere

Spend a couple of hours tooling around the city and see what turns up.
Every five feet is a photo op.

by Rebecca Mazzei
10/3/2007

After the debut of the arts section's new "Art is Everywhere" series a few weeks ago, artist and Detroit surveyor Scott Hocking sent over this e-mail:

Last week, a friend of mine pointed out that their stenciled graffiti was featured in a photo in MT. That's when I noticed the lil "delray crib in the hood" photo on the same page, and read your caption. Not only was the site familiar to me — as I have been documenting the Delray and Carbon Works sections of Detroit for awhile — but I'd been out there that same weekend, and ended up at the same 'one day only' yard sale on Fort Street. That guy was a real interesting character, eh? Over a thousand banks??? And you bought a bunch of them? Did you buy the one shaped like a peanut? How funny! I got myself a fantastic framed golden shark sculpture — which you'll see featured in one of the attached photos. Cheers! —Scott